Raheesa Legohn is one of Art of Legohn's musical performers. She is a percussionist for the company with experience in marching percussion, drum set, and auxiliary percussion. She began learning music at the age of ten and continues to play today.

Her primary musical experience is in marching percussion. She has played the snare drum for a total 8 years in the Oxnard High School Marching Band and in San Diego State University Marching Aztecs. Along with being a performer, Raheesa was also the drum major during her senior year of high school and is currently the drumline captain at San Diego State University.

Aside from marching percussion, Raheesa has been a part of the Oxnard High School Jazz Band and most recently a member of the San Diego State University Varsity Band. In both groups she played drum set and other auxiliary percussion instruments.

Raheesa continues her college education at San Diego State University where she studies education as a Liberal Studies major. Although her priority is being a college student, she continues to have a passion for music and regards it as an important part of her life. She is excited to join the Art of Legohn Company and keep the music alive.
